GENELE ERICSON
FALCON CREST

LORIMAR

Genele (Andrea Thompson) and Frank Agretti (Rod Taylor) share a very dark and sick secret: she murdered Frank's wife, her sister, to help their affair progress.

Rating: 5 wags

Motivation: Love and laziness. Genele's acts of passion were first motivated by her love for Frank Agretti. When that affair was poisoned by the guilt resulting from her sister, Renée's, death, Genele began to live off other men. In that respect, Michael Sharpe suits her purpose, although she still loves Frank.

Naughty Deeds: Genele's sister, Renée, was married to Frank Agretti. In love with Frank herself, Genele murdered her sister. It wasn't a plot, but Frank never turned her in. Later, she worked out a contract with Michael Sharpe in which she would exchange sexual favors for his wealth. Not a lot of self-esteem here, but there's no need to develop it since she seems to find luxury in moral bankruptcy.

Redeeming Qualities: None. Genele knows she's sick and twisted. When she tries to get over as a warm maternal type (à la Maggie or Lauren) with Richard Channing, it doesn't wash.

Role Model: Although she's never lived in the Tuscany Valley, Lizzie Borden is a woman Genele would admire.
